Sunscreen 411

Whether you're a sunscreen whiz or novice, everyone can benefit from a crash course in the basics (and not-so-basics!) of sun protection. Here, we answer your burning sun care questions, debunk common sunscreen myths and help you find your SPF BFF!

Dr. Bertha Baum,
Board-Certified
Dermatologist, on the importance of sunscreen

Wearing sunscreen every day is as important as brushing your teeth. Did you know that on cloudy or rainy days, up to 80% of the sun's rays can still reach you? In my office, I see patients daily who don't know that they need to be wearing sunscreen, and some have never used sun protection in their lives. Everyone, regardless of age or race, needs to make sunscreen a staple in their daily routine. I recommend Neutrogena® sunscreens to all of my patients first and foremost because they work, but also because the brand has a wide variety of products to meet everyone's needs. Neutrogena® is a leader in the sun care space, and it is backed by science and skin care professionals, which is a great indication when choosing products to help maintain your skin's health.

DR. BERTHA BAUM

FORM HEALTHY HABITS

Applying sunscreen should be the most important step in your morning routine. Dr. Baum recommends washing your face, applying any treatments and then using SPF (this will prevent your skin care ingredients from breaking down in the sun).

Sun Day, Every Day

While your summer plans might look a little different this year, one thing remains the same: the need for sunscreen. Whether you're taking your dog for a stroll or lounging with family in the backyard, it's as important as ever to stay on top of your sun safety. Below, discover the dermatologist-approved facts, tips and tricks that will help you ace your sun protection this season.

SUN CARE CHEAT SHEET

UVA RAYS = Responsible for premature aging

UVB RAYS = Responsible for sunburns

SPF = Stands for sun protection factor

BROAD SPECTRUM = Helps protect from both types of UV rays

THE ABCs OF UVAs AND UVBs

Remember the difference between UVA and UVB rays by equating the "A" with "Aging" and the "B" with "Burning."

APPLICATION RULES

The average person should use a dime-sized amount of sunscreen for the face and a golf ball-sized amount for the body 15 minutes before sun exposure. Remember to reapply this amount every two hours.

THE NO-SHADE ZONE

True or False?

People with darker skin tones don't need to wear sunscreen daily.

FALSE! People with darker skin tones are still susceptible to skin cancer and sun damage.

You can get sun damage indoors.

TRUE! The sunlight streaming through your windows can damage your skin.

Sunspots can be caused by factors other than the sun.

FALSE! Sunspots can only be caused by sun exposure.

You don't need to apply a facial sunscreen if your makeup or moisturizer contains SPF 15-30.

FALSE! The SPF found in makeups and moisturizers should be viewed as additional protection on top of your facial sunscreen of SPF 30 or higher.

5 Things We're Talking About this week!

Beyoncé drops a surprise song

In honor of Juneteenth, the star released "Black Parade" and will donate proceeds to Black-owned small businesses. "I hope we continue to share joy and celebrate each other," she wrote on Instagram.

Kristen Stewart will play Lady Di

The former teen queen will take on the people's princess for the upcoming film Spencer, about the weekend Diana decided she wanted out of her marriage to Prince Charles.

The brand will donate $1 to GLAAD for every pack of gray Skittles sold

Skittles go gray for Gay Pride

To send the message that only one rainbow matters this time of year, the candy debuted colorless packages in CVS and Walmart stores. (You can still taste the rainbow.)

The U.S. Open is a go

No need for the ump to call "Quiet, please!" The annual New York City tennis tournament got the okay to proceed this August with champs like Serena Williams planning to play—just without fans in the stadium.

Ewan McGregor will voice Pinocchio's cricket

The Scottish actor jumped in to play Pinocchio's right-hand man, er, insect, in Guillermo del Toro's darker-than-Disney version of the classic for Netflix.

McGregor says he may sing—like Disney's beloved Jiminy Cricket

THEIR LOVE STORY: THEN AND NOW

After Locklear and Heisser graduated from Newbury Park High School with complementary coifs in 1979 (left), she skyrocketed to fame on Dynasty, then married (and divorced) two rockers, Tommy Lee and Richie Sambora. After reuniting with Heisser (above, with her in 2017), she wrote of her long-lost love: "My favorite person on earth. Forty years later."

a quote from author Maya Angelou: "I've learned that life sometimes gives you a second chance." The past few years have been turbulent for Locklear as she struggled with what a source has said were issues with alcohol, drugs and mental health. Last year she completed 30 days in court-ordered rehab after pleading no contest to misdemeanor battery charges stemming from altercations with a police officer and an EMT. Now the actress is starting fresh with fiancé Heisser, who has been a source of stability, by her side. "After all the fame, she found her way back to a simpler life with the boy she dated in high school," says the family friend. "It's a wonderful feeling to know you got it right the first time."

These days Locklear finds happiness in quieter pursuits, such as gardening and cooking for her elderly parents. Says the family friend: "It's very sweet." As is the time spent with her 22-year-old daughter Ava, who recently graduated from Loyola Marymount University—with a 4.0 GPA, as a proud Locklear recently posted. They celebrated with cake, pink lemonade and a surprise drive-by celebration outside of their L.A. home. "Celebrations like that help keep Heather sober," says another source. "She wants to be present for everything that's important to her daughter."

And as they look forward to their life together, Heisser helps Locklear do just that. "He always loved her and really believed she could get sober," says the source. "After everything they went through, it's amazing to see that they stuck together. Heather has come such a long way."

Lasting Love? "They are very happy together," a source says of Morrone and DiCaprio (in N.Y.C. in September).

Leo & Camila Are Getting Serious

Leonardo DiCaprio, 45, is enjoying all the extra time he's been spending with actress and model Camila Morrone, his girlfriend of two years. On June 19 the couple, who have been self-isolating together, ventured out to celebrate Morrone's 23rd birthday on a yacht excursion. They sailed from Marina Del Ray to Malibu with several friends, including actress Nina Dobrev, snowboarder Shaun White and actors Kevin Connolly and Lukas Haas. "They are very close," a source says of the couple, adding that the Oscar winner seems "serious" about Morrone. "He is usually very independent and spends lots of time with friends, but because of the lockdown, he has mostly spent time with Camila," the source continues. The actress, 41, revealed that she's finally joining the senator, 51, in Newark after dating for more than a year. "I'm excited," she said at the Mooby's Pop-Up in L.A.

Engaged

Michael Castellon & Alex Guarnaschelli

The Food Network star's boyfriend of four years popped the question on her 51st birthday. "We're not in any hurry, but I want to have a blowout," says Chopped judge Guarnaschelli.

Divorcing

Michael Ray & Carly Pearce

On June 19 Pearce, 30, filed for divorce from fellow country singer Ray, 32, after just eight months of marriage. "It wasn't something she wanted to have to do," says a Pearce source. "This hasn't been a quarantine realization—it was a last resort."

Joe & Sophie Get Ready for Baby

One year after saying "I do," Joe Jonas and Sophie Turner are gearing up to welcome their first child together. "Sophie was covering up her belly for as long as she could," says a source of the characteristically private Game of Thrones actress. But now, "she's showing a lot and looks amazing."

Over the holidays Turner, 24, and Jonas, 30, purchased a new baby-friendly home in L.A. "They were hoping to expand their family," an insider says of the couple, who eloped to Las Vegas two months before exchanging vows in a formal wedding ceremony in France in June 2019. "It's brand-new, very modern and a great family house." And of course, Turner and her singer husband have been busy putting the finishing touches on the nursery. "They're decorating the room," says the insider. "They are definitely staying busy preparing for the baby."

The couple have been lying low since the coronavirus pandemic hit the U.S. in March. While they showed their support at a Black Lives Matter protest in early June, "they're not spending time with family or friends," says the source. "They're being cautious because of Sophie's pregnancy." Still, the stars are eager to enter the next chapter of their lives together. Says the source: "She and Joe are both very happy."

Gabby Barrett's life has been a whirlwind since she placed third on American Idol in 2018. Last year she wed fellow Idol contestant Cade Foehner and hit No. 1 with her breakout single "I Hope"—and she just dropped her debut album, Goldmine. Now isolating at home in Nashville, Barrett, 20, talks music and marriage.

How has quarantine time been for you and Cade? It has been wonderful. With us both being musicians, it was hard to get downtime with each other before. So we've gotten to bond more.

What have you been up to? We've only lived in Nashville for eight months now, so we're taking time to sightsee. And we started watching Lost—we're on episode 17 of season 1, and I'm like, "How many episodes are there?!"

Did Cade inspire any of the songs on Goldmine? Of course. He inspired "The Good Ones." He also played guitar on a few songs on the album.

You've been called a young Carrie Underwood. Have you kept in touch since she mentored you on Idol? If I'm going to be compared to anybody, I hope it's Carrie Underwood. When "I Hope" went No. 1, she texted me congrats. I think I can call her a friend now!

Inside Rebel Wilson's Healthy Transformation

Rebel Wilson is opening up about her wellness journey. The Pitch Perfect star, 40, is working hard to get to what she says is her goal weight of 165 lbs. by the end of the year and has been documenting her progress on social media. “Rebel has been creating personal goals each year for a while now,” says a friend of the Australian actress. “2018 was the year of fun, and she went on amazing adventures and traveled a lot; 2019 was the year of love, and she went on fabulous dates; 2020 is the year of health. She has been very focused and dedicated.” Wilson's health journey was inspired by her trip to Austria's luxury medical detox and wellness center VivaMayr last year, and she continues to practice what she learned there. “She's following the Mayr method, which is all about improving digestion and the immune system and reducing sugars,” says her friend. “She also exercises with a personal trainer up to six times a week.” Wilson admits getting in shape isn't always easy, but she knows the hard work will pay off. “Give a little bit of effort each day…I know some days are frustrating as hell, you feel like giving up, you get annoyed at the lack of progress,” she wrote. “But good things are coming your way.” The actress has been posting photos of her workouts and recently showed off her shape in a fitted blue dress. “It's brave because putting yourself out there increases the pressure, especially setting such an ambitious goal,” says the friend. “But she's having fun with new fashion and beauty looks and feeling great.”

PERSONAL STORIES ABOUT GIVING BACK

The entrepreneur and reality star, 49, helps families and medical workers get supplies for the coronavirus crisis

New York is a city of survivors. As a New Yorker, when the coronavirus hit, I knew I had to do something. But the stakes were so much higher than with the relief work I had done in the past, because this pandemic affects the entire world. Through my BSTRONG initiative, we got to work and raised funds to put together coronavirus kits for families that contained masks and gloves, as well as antibacterial and sanitation wipes. We then pivoted into getting PPE [personal protective equipment] to hospitals and medical workers. I was a switchboard operator, just finding aid all over the country. BSTRONG, in partnership with Global Empowerment Mission, has now raised approximately $5.75 million in funds and distributed approximately $19 million in protective equipment nationwide. I do think New York will come out of this having learned something—and we will be stronger.

Forever Bonded
Jean with JFK on April 10, 1961, in Washington, D.C. Her daughter Kym says she spoke of her siblings "all the time and how close they all were."

1928-2020

Jean Kennedy Smith

JFK's last surviving sibling lived through tragedy and scandal and played a role in forging peace in Northern Ireland

The death of Jean Kennedy Smith marked the end of an era for the storied political family that often seemed as deeply cursed as it was blessed. The last surviving child of Joseph P. Kennedy and his wife, Rose, died on June 17 at age 92 in her Manhattan apartment. "She led an amazing life," says her daughter Kym Smith. Ten years younger than JFK and the favorite playmate of her younger brother Teddy, Jean was the most private of all the Kennedy siblings. Growing up in Bronxville, Hyannis Port and Palm Beach, she saw the rise of the family dynasty, the long-held dream of her fiercely ambitious parents. Jean introduced two of her brothers to their future wives: Bobby to her college roommate Ethel Skakel; Ted to his first wife, Joan Bennett. But Jean did not seek the public eye. She married financier Stephen Smith (who later managed the family's $500 million fortune) and had four children with him: Stephen, 63, William, 59, Amanda, 53, and Kym, 47. "She was never comfortable with the gigantic light that surrounded the Kennedys," says The Kennedy Women author Laurence Leamer. But in 1991, when William was accused (and later acquitted) of raping a woman at the family's Palm Beach compound after a night of drinking with his uncle Ted, she was forced into the spotlight. She attended the trial every day and "was very involved in the defense of her son," says William's attorney Roy Black. "They always stuck together." Two years later she was named ambassador to Ireland by Bill Clinton, and she contributed to the 1998 peace accords in Northern Ireland. "She didn't know what she was doing at first, but she learned quickly," says family friend Rose Styron. In her 2016 memoir Jean described summers at the Cape and triumphant political campaigns, but not the pain of losing JFK and Bobby or the many other losses she had lived through. Yet she did share a few words her father told her mother after the death of their oldest son Joe in a WWII combat mission in 1944. "We've got to carry on," he said. "Carry on they did," Jean wrote, "and we along with them." —LIZ McNEIL with reporting by Linda Marx

Cat Owners Are Making Elaborate Cardboard Tanks for Their Pets to Enjoy and Destroy

WORLDWIDE

Cat owners around the world have found something to do with those empty delivery boxes before recycling them. They are making tanks for their tabbies—and posting pictures of them on Instagram. Corina Ilea, an artist from Romania, grabbed a pair of scissors and a bunch of cardboard boxes to fashion a tank-shaped playground for her five felines. "Kitties really love boxes, so I thought of building them the ultimate toy," she says. "The cats were all over me while I built the tank, waiting anxiously to get in. They loved it from the beginning and they destroyed it in like a week." DIY-ers are going that extra mile, adding decorations, paint and, of course, empty toilet-paper rolls. Even celebs have been getting in on the action. Actress Kate Beckinsale posted a video of her cat Clive chilling in his cat tank last month. Instagram's #cattank hashtag has more than 4,000 posts.

As Restaurants Reopen, Stuffed Animals Are Nabbing Some of the Best Seats

LAS VEGAS AND MIAMI BEACH

Some restaurants reopening at limited capacity have found unusual seat fillers for their empty chairs: stuffed animals. "They're incredibly popular for selfies," says Elizabeth Blau, owner of Honey Salt in Las Vegas, where 25 giant teddy bears wear face masks. Within the luxury hotel SLS South Beach, stuffed bears and monkeys on dinner dates fill empty tables at Katsuya and the Bazaar by José Andrés. Says the hotel company's chief brand officer Michele Caniato: "It's an element of surprise."

THE BEST STUFF TO WATCH, READ & LISTEN TO THIS WEEK!

Rhys plays Mason at the very start of his career.

MERRICK MORTON/HBO

TV | Perry Mason

Matthew Rhys revives—and how!—a legendary crime fighter

DRAMA This terrific HBO series is essentially the origin story of the world-famous criminal-defense attorney created by Erle Stanley Gardner and played by Raymond Burr on a hit CBS series (1957-66). Those who remember Burr's performance—which made him one of TV's highest-paid actors of the time—may think of Mason as a solid gray bulwark of the legal profession. Here, though, he's played by The Americans' Matthew Rhys, who's lithe, quick, alert, occasionally volatile—and awfully good-looking. With his jet-black hair and sharp profile, he's like the sexiest raven alive. This Mason, hard-drinking and untidy, is living in Los Angeles in the 1930s, working as a private eye for attorney E.B. Jonathan (John Lithgow), a fusty old sad sack whose career is sputtering out. Mason gets caught up in a case involving a kidnapped baby, a Holy Roller evangelist (Tatiana Maslany), crooked cops and a range of citizens high and low, most of them legally compromised—all very much in the tradition of L.A. noir. Mason is like Chinatown, only maybe shot under a carpet (the richly detailed production design is very dark). Rhys gets a huge assist from Juliet Rylance as Della Reese, Mason's assistant. She's crisp, cool and direct, cutting through the tawdriness like Florence Nightingale stepping into a sick tent. Let's have season 2! (HBO, Sundays, 9 p.m.)

The Killing star, 44, is back on July 3 for season 2 of Amazon's Hanna as Marissa, a CIA agent newly allied with a kid assassin (Esme Creed-Miles).

With Esme Creed-Miles.

Can you give a few spoiler-free hints about the new season?
Well, we have a new bad guy (Dermot Mulroney)—he's really formidable. We can expect a lot more of the thriller genre and Hanna under fire.

How are you and your husband, Succession star Alan Ruck, spending lockdown with your family?
We are lucky enough to have a little house out in Palm Springs. It's a haven for us.

Honing any new skills out there?
I'm learning to play the piano—remote lessons with a wonderful teacher.

MOVIE | Irresistible

A red-versus-blue hullabaloo

COMEDY Former Daily Show host Jon Stewart is both writer and director of this funny but surprisingly gentle satire about our current political culture—what he's created here is a basket of adorables. Democratic political operative Gary Zimmer (Steve Carell) thinks he's found the human template for a new kind of progressive candidate: He's Wisconsin farmer Jack Hasting (Chris Cooper), who pops up in a viral video clip speaking with passion and integrity at a town meeting. To Gary, he's "a church-going Bernie Sanders with better bone density"—and a perfect possibility for mayor. Then, in swoops Gary's Republican opposite (Rose Byrne). "Spinning," she says, "is something you do to disorient people." Irresistible is worth a spin. (On demand June 26, R)

A grand old party: Byrne and Carell.

MUSIC | Bob Dylan, Rough and Rowdy Ways

ROCK The Bard's first set of originals since 2012 closes with the 17-minute "Murder Most Foul," making for an hour-plus of elegiac, ruminative tunes on which the 79-year-old contemplates the ceaseless march of history, culture and time. "I've already outlived my life by far," he growls on "Mother of Muses." (Available now)

NETFLIX | Dating Around

REALITY Now in season 2, this series has a clean setup. A romantically inclined person goes on five dates. In the course of a half hour, we cut from encounter to encounter, waiting to see which one date will be invited for a second go. You'll be surprised how quickly you get sucked in: It's like watching a shell game, and love is the pea waiting to be revealed. (Streaming now)

If You Used a Credit or Debit Card at an InterContinental Hotels Group (IHG) Branded Hotel Location Between August 1, 2016 and December 29, 2016, You Could Get Money from a Class Action Settlement.

Si desea recibir esta notificación en español, llámenos o visite nuestra página web.

A Settlement has been reached in a class action lawsuit involving malware intrusions that affected certain Inter-Continental Hotels Corporation and InterContinental Hotels Group Resources, Inc. ("IHG")-branded hotel, restaurant and bar locations between August 1, 2016 through December 29, 2016 (the "Data Security Incidents"). The affected hotel brands include InterContinental, Holiday Inn, Holiday Inn Express & Suites, Candlewood Suites, Crowne Plaza, Staybridge Suites, and Hotel Indigo. The specific locations and time frames during which the IHG-branded hotel, restaurant, and bar locations were affected by the Data Security Incidents are available at www.IHGdatasecuritysettlement.com.

Who is Included?

You are included in the Settlement if you reside in the United States and used a credit or debit card at the front desk of an affected hotel location or to make or attempt to make a purchase at an affected restaurant or bar location identified at the website www.IHGdatasecuritysettlement.com during the period in which that hotel, restaurant or bar was affected by the Data Security Incidents.

What can I get from the Settlement?

The Settlement provides for payments to people who submit valid claims for documented out-of-pocket expenses of up to $250 that either of the Data Security Incidents was a contributing factor to the expense being incurred, and for reimbursement of documented fraudulent and unauthorized losses of up to $3,500 that were more likely than not caused by the Data Security Incidents. The total payments to the class are capped at $1,550,000.

How do I get a Payment?

The only way to qualify for a payment is to submit a valid Claim Form online or postmarked no later than September 12, 2020. You can file a claim online at www.IHGdatasecuritysettlement.com or call 1-833-913-4210 to request that a Claim Form be mailed to you.

What are my Rights?

Do Nothing: If you do nothing, you will remain in the Settlement Class, but you will not be eligible for benefits, and you will be bound by the decisions of the Court and give up your rights to sue IHG for the claims resolved by this Settlement.

Object to the Settlement: You can stay in the Settlement Class and object to the Settlement for any reason. Objections must be filed with the Clerk of Court for the United States District Court for the Northern District of Georgia by August 12, 2020.

Exclude Yourself: If you do not want to be legally bound by the Settlement and wish to retain the right to sue IHG, you must request to be excluded by August 12, 2020. Detailed instructions on how to object or exclude yourself can be found at www.IHGdatasecuritysettlement.com.

On September 2, 2020, the Court will hold a Final Fairness Hearing to determine whether to approve the Settlement, Class Counsel's request for attorneys' fees and reasonable costs and expenses of $550,000, and an Incentive Award of $1,500 for each of the Representative Plaintiffs. The final approval motion and motion for attorneys' fees and reasonable costs and expenses will be posted on the Settlement website after they are filed. You or your lawyer may attend the hearing at your own cost, but you do not have to.

This is only a summary. For additional information including the Claim Form, the Settlement Agreement, how to file an objection, and Frequently Asked Questions call 1-833-913-4210 or visit www.IHGdatasecuritysettlement.com.

TV | I'll Be Gone in the Dark

CRIME Directed by Liz Garbus, this docuseries settles in like a nightmare. It's based on the bestselling book by Michelle McNamara, comedian Patton Oswalt's wife, who died two years before its 2018 publication. She was fascinated—obsessed—by the so-called Golden State Killer, responsible for 12 deaths and more than 50 rapes. (A former cop was arrested as a suspect just as the series started filming.) Dark is about her hunt for evidence, but it's also about a whole realm of true-crime devotees, pursuing justice into the shadows. (HBO, June 28, 10 p.m.)

NETFLIX | Eurovision Song Contest: The Story of Fire Saga

COMEDY ABBA wannabes Lars and Sigrit (Will Ferrell and Rachel McAdams) have written a pounding anthem, "Volcano Man," but the locals at the bar in their small Icelandic town just want them to sing "Ja Ja Ding Dong." By a strange turn of circumstances—cue the exploding yacht—they wind up in the fabulously campy Eurovision Song Contest, which ABBA won in 1974 with "Waterloo." Fire Saga doesn't have the enchanting stupidity of other Ferrell comedies, but McAdams is sweet as Sigrit, a simple soul who believes in elves and coos with surprise because champagne is served in tall glasses. (Launches June 26)

TV | BET Awards

Actress and comedian Amanda Seales hosts this star-studded three-hour event, featuring performances by John Legend, Jennifer Hudson, Lil Wayne, Megan Thee Stallion and Roddy Ricch (those last two are up for five awards each). Drake is the evening's front-runner—six nominations. (BET and CBS, June 28, 8 p.m.)

Why Did I Get a B?

NONFICTION

When the author was a hall monitor in the Catholic school where she taught, she'd stand by the statuary and say to errant students: "Jesus and I would like to know why you're out of class." So yes, her book is funny. It's also revealing. She recognizes a primary tenet of her profession: "To be a good teacher is to care very much about people, which is an effective way to get your heart broken on the regular." THE POWER OF DIPLOMACY AND HOW TO MAKE IT WORK FOR YOU
CAPRICIA PENAVIC MARSHALL

Why is protocol important? [It's really] civility, knowing how to behave, and it's a great power to have.

How is COVID-19 changing the rules? Greetings are important, and since we can't shake hands, we need to convey welcome in other ways. Like the namaste—placing palms together.

Is cheek kissing over? It's inappropriate now, but I do not believe it will be passé. We might migrate from the European triple kiss to the American air kiss.

How is etiquette different for virtual meetings? You have to think about your environment. A bedroom with laundry strewn all over doesn't inspire confidence!

Royal Resilience Kate (at the garden center on June 19) "is a very capable woman who will cope with whatever situation she is in," says a close source.

The Art of Being Kate

The royal mom is back to public duty after a 3-month pandemic lockdown—and adjusting to the void left by Harry and Meghan's departure from royal life. How she's facing public pressures and the changing expectations for a future Queen

By ERIN HILL

AARON CHOWN/PA/SHUTTERSTOCK

Zooming In
Kate (on a virtual call on June 17) "harnesses her performance skills into deeply felt causes," says royal historian Robert Lacey.

Marking her first public outing in 91 days, Princess Kate toured a Norfolk garden center with a smile on June 18. "It's good to get a structure and a routine back, isn't it?" Kate, 38, told the owners of Fakenham Garden Centre, where she stopped by to encourage others to support local businesses as they start to reopen after a three-month pandemic lockdown. As for so many families, "routine" amid coronavirus has been wildly readjusted for Kate, Prince William and their children Prince George, 6, Princess Charlotte, 5, and Prince Louis, 2. The family's palace home base in London shifted to their country estate in Norfolk, royal engagements were canceled, and the kids were launched into homeschooling. The isolation period, Kate admits, "has been ups and downs."

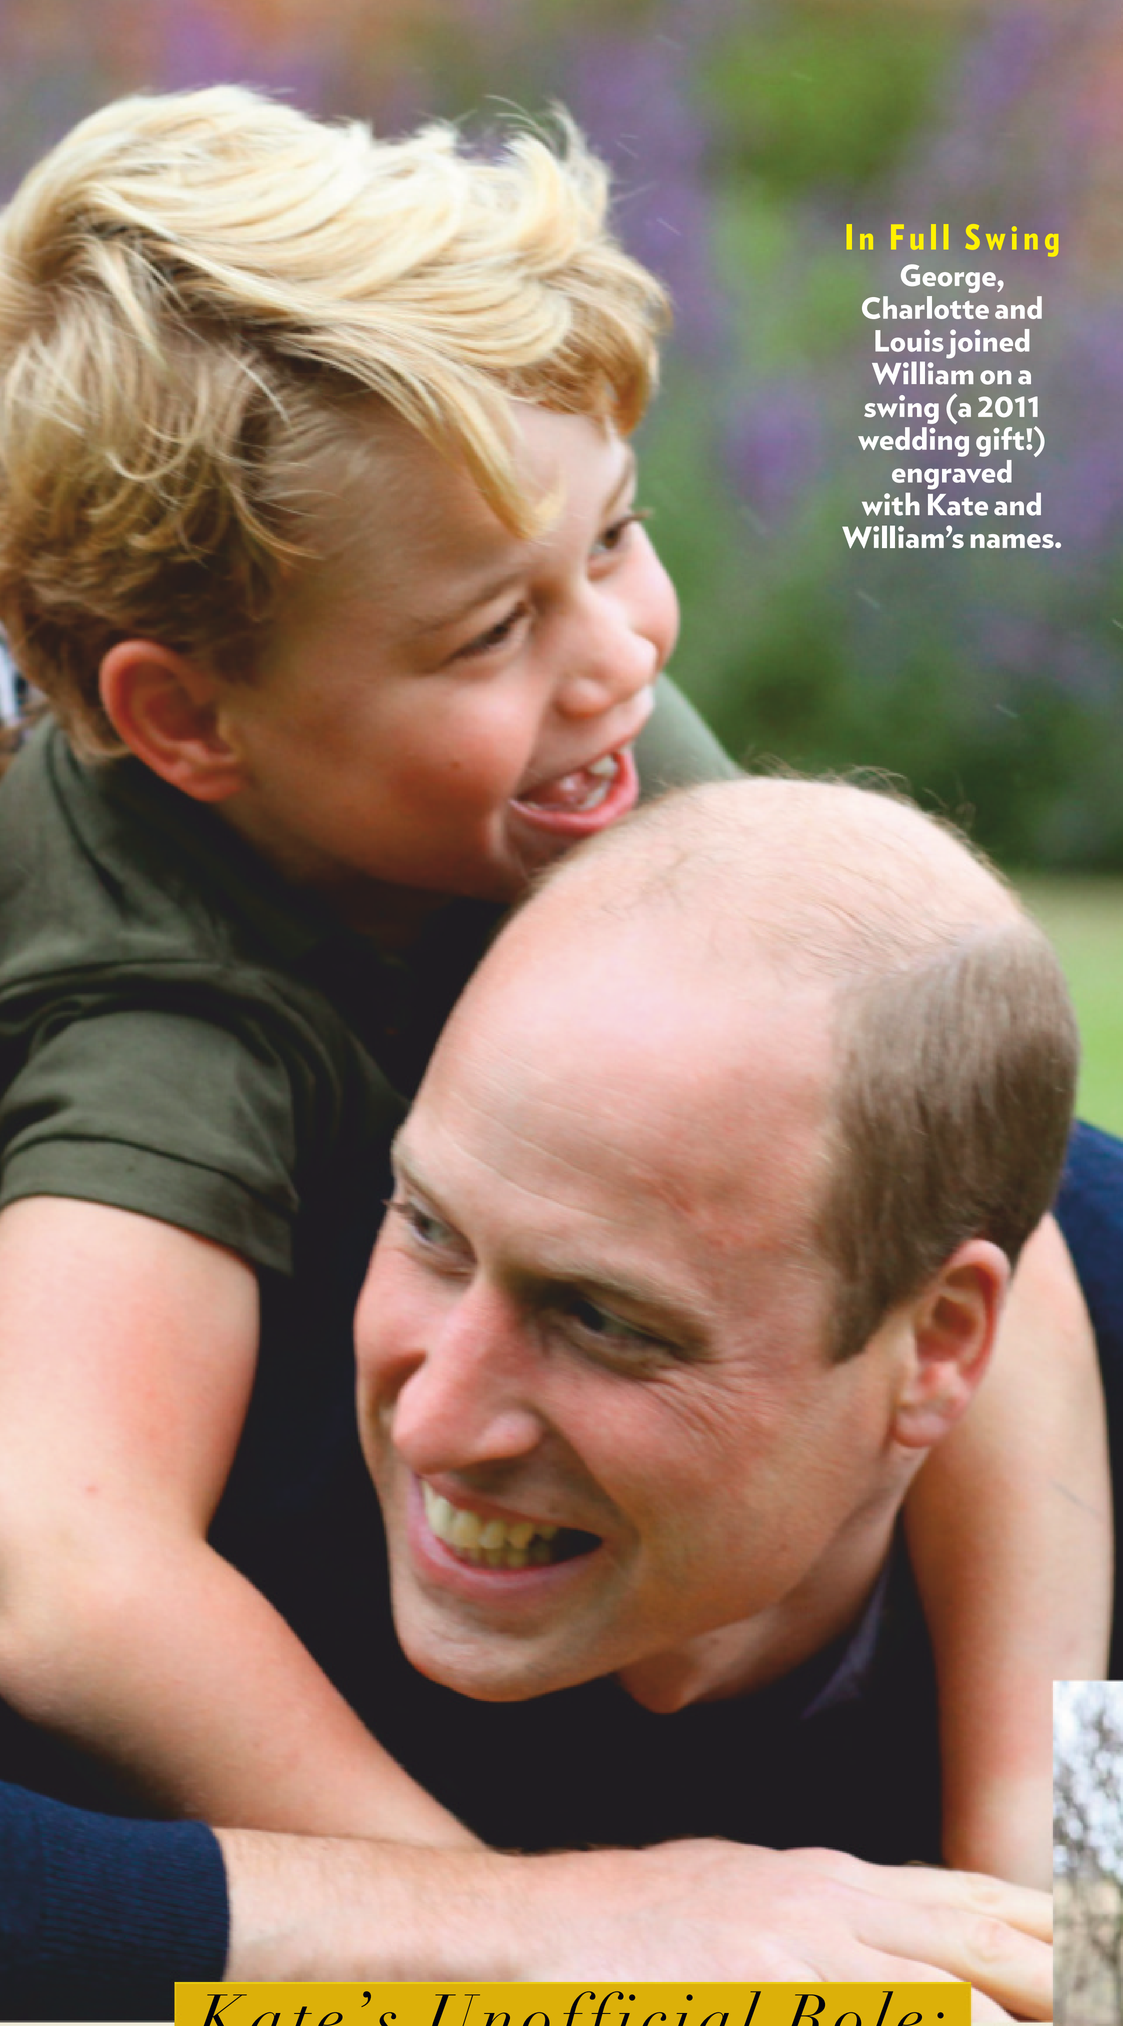
The pandemic roller coaster coincided with a period of massive transition for the royal family—namely, the dramatic departure of Prince Harry, Meghan Markle and their 1-year-old son Archie, who relocated to L.A. just before lockdown. The exit of the Sussexes—the only other "senior royal" contemporaries of William and Kate—thrusts the future Queen Catherine even closer to the center of the royal family. "Without Meghan and Harry, there is going to be a phenomenal workload on Catherine and William," says a source close to the royal household. "None of the older [generations] can do it all. The pressure is on the two of them."

The unprecedented shift has brought renewed scrutiny, including a recent cover story in the U.K.'s Tatler magazine claiming that Kate felt stressed

RIGHT: THE DUCHESS OF CAMBRIDGE(4)



In Full Swing
George, Charlotte and Louis joined William on a swing (a 2011 wedding gift!) engraved with Kate and William's names.

Kate's Unofficial Role: Family Photographer!

Kate has honed her skills behind the camera since becoming a mother, and on June 21 her latest images were released for Father's Day and William's 38th birthday. The photos offer a glimpse into the family's home life—something William and Kate are more comfortable sharing as the children grow up. "They're happy in that space," says royal biographer Penny Junor. "Charles and Camilla have become the nation's grandparents in a way. And William and Kate are now the model family."

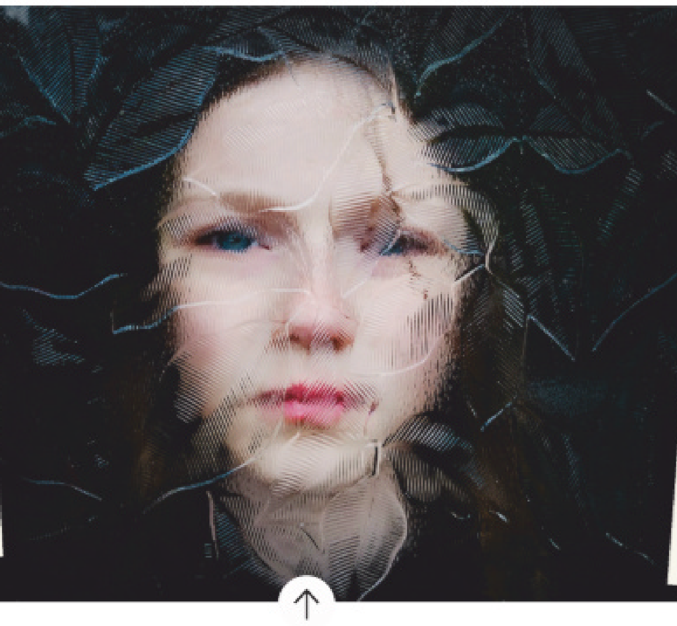
Future Kings
Kate also snapped a shot of William and Prince Charles in December 2019, released for Father's Day.

Kate's Pandemic Passion Project

The duchess teamed with the National Portrait Gallery for an exhibit on life during COVID-19

Moments of Joy

Kate helped curate submissions for the project, called "Hold Still."



Challenging Times

"Some desperately sad images show the human tragedy of this pandemic," Kate said.

New Normal

Other "amazing" entries "show [families] adapting to life during lockdown," she said.

and overwhelmed by the vacuum resulting from Harry and Meghan's exit. In a rare statement, the palace promptly blasted the story's "inaccuracies" and threatened legal action against the publication. Kate "certainly would resent someone saying that she is struggling," says a close source. "I can understand why she would feel that is a total misrepresentation of the truth, because it really isn't the case. If anything, she is relishing the role more than ever. And she will do it all to the best of her ability."

But as the future Queen raising a future King, Kate is expected to flawlessly fulfill multiple roles: princess, supportive spouse, hands-on mom, international bridge-builder, charity advocate, style icon and more. And she now finds herself trying to do it all at a time when the public is reexamining old institutions and their place in modern society. "Those who know her say there is a real core of strength, and she did set her mind to the job," says Sarah Gristwood, author of Elizabeth: The Queen and the Crown. "But at the same time, she'd have to be superhuman not to feel the pressure."

Kate's family know all too well the strain of her royal role. Her mom, Carole, 65, was portrayed as pushy in the Tatler article. "There is no way you would describe her as that," says the close source. "She's an incredibly kind person." Both of Kate's siblings—Pippa, 36, and James, 33—have been pushed into the public eye, and in recent years James has opened up about his battle with depression, revealing that he has attended family therapy. "They have all learned to deal with it better now," says another source. "I think it was harder earlier on."

> 'She'd have to be superhuman not to feel the pressure'
> –SARAH GRISTWOOD

Still, few outside the family could ever understand the blinding glare that comes with marrying the heir to the throne. "The future Queen is a role model to the U.K. but also to the world, which means all eyes are on you," says royal etiquette expert Myka Meier, author of Modern Etiquette Made Easy. "The added pressure of having cameras everywhere to catch even the slightest eye movement makes everything she does a conscious effort. From the perfectly poised posture to the way she descends a staircase or gets out of a car—it is all carefully done."

The global scrutiny means that even her style choices carry enormous weight. "With Meghan gone, the only person who really could provide the glamour factor is Kate," says Gristwood. "Visually she has always done that within safe parameters." That expectation extends to her kids as well. "I think the pressure is more about her public image, making sure she is wearing the right brands, showing the kids in less expensive clothing, especially right now," says an insider. "Small details, but they matter." Even when she's off royal duty, she's polished, with a

Pressure to Be Perfect

No matter the occasion, the expectations are sky-high for Kate to make sure she hits her mark

Mastering Royal Protocol

Kate (greeting Queen Elizabeth in 2017) has perfected the ultimate curtsy. "The deeper and longer you pause shows more respect and formality," says etiquette expert Myka Meier.

Flawless Fashion

Kate considers every detail of her look—including specific accessories like this gold brooch and sprig of real shamrocks for St. Patrick's Day in 2019.

International Tour Style

She and William are expected to carefully exercise their "soft power," which Kate (in Pakistan in 2019) does in part by honoring host countries in traditional dress.

Spotless Sneakers

Kate is a fan of white sneakers—but unlike the rest of ours, hers never have the slightest smudge. Her style, like the Queen's, is "chic but conservative and always respectful," says Meier.

Perfect Pony

"She's always surprised when the press make such a fuss about her hair," says a source, "but I think she's accepted it now."

Perennially Poised

Kate demonstrated the "duchess slant" in 2016 with William—with cameras trained on every angle, even her sitting position requires careful consideration.

perfect ponytail or spotless sneakers, aware of the expectation that a duchess never look undone. "As a woman, you're going to be pulled apart by every columnist and every Twitter user—you're either too thin or the dress you're wearing is horrid or your eye makeup is too heavy," says royal biographer Penny Junor. "She has had all of that. It takes a very strong woman to be able to ignore it all."

Part of her strength lies in her partnership with William, 38. "In one sense hers and William's was a modern royal marriage, in that it was a love match," says Gristwood. "But in another it has been old-fashioned, in the sense that Kate didn't have an established career beforehand, which is unusual for a young woman today. She mostly appears as a supportive figure to her husband." Adds Junor: "She's never trying to outshine him in any way. Charles and Diana looked the part, but Diana was always a star in the making. I think that Kate is a bit like Prince Philip supporting the Queen. She doesn't outshine William but still has a lot to say herself."

Supportive Spouse
"She and William [on March 4] are a formidable team," says the close source.

Indeed, Kate has increasingly found her confidence with her royal work. "Catherine is the sort of woman who will take on whatever she needs to," says the close source. "If she needs to step up to the plate, she does it—and she always has." Her "5 Big Questions" early-childhood survey saw her tackle multiple solo stops across the U.K. earlier this year, and she has earned praise with her "Hold Still" photography project (see box).

The past few months have also allowed for ample family bonding. "They are spending more time together than they would normally, and they are having to do more with the children than they usually would," says the source close to the royal household. "They still have help at home, but they are doing more." The candid photos Kate took for Father's Day "show the realities of family life, of coping with rambunctious kids and relaxing with them and having time with them," says the source. "But they are also doing their work via video chats and attending outings. They are doing what we all are—juggling." As with everything, adds the source, Kate "wants to do a good job."

Meghan & Harry: Their New Direction

As Meghan and Harry settle into their new life in L.A. with 1-year-old son Archie, the Duke and Duchess of Sussex (delivering food in L.A. in April and with Archie on May 6) are also moving forward with their new charitable organization Archewell. "They have had the opportunity to speak with some incredible thought leaders, and those conversations have been deeply educational and helpful in identifying the work they want to do with Archewell," says a source. "They are applying all their learnings to the future of the organization." Given the massive upheaval from both the COVID-19 pandemic and the racial-justice movement sparked by the killing of George Floyd, Meghan and Harry have refocused their efforts on current events. "As many others have, they have been moved to get their voices behind supporting both the COVID-19 response and Black Lives Matter," the source adds. "But that's not separate from the values that will be reflected in Archewell. They are excited to see it all come together. It's what they have always dreamed of doing together."

GOV. ANDREW CUOMO: CALM THROUGH A CRISIS

Daughters Are Grounding for Me’

NEW YORK’S GOVERNOR LOOKS BACK ON 3 ‘INDESCRIBABLY PAINFUL’ MONTHS AT THE PANDEMIC’S EPICENTER: HEARTACHE, SLEEPLESS NIGHTS AND THE ‘SILVER LINING’ OF HAVING HIS DAUGHTERS HOME AGAIN

By ADAM CARLSON

‘A Great Comfort’ For Cuomo (with, from left, Michaela, Cara and Mariah at the governor’s mansion in Albany), pandemic work has been a family affair: “We were all doing everything we could.”

The worst part of Andrew Cuomo's day—"indescribably painful," he says—comes around midnight with the ping of an email from New York State's hospitals tallying the number of sick and dead from coronavirus. "You're wondering, when will it stop? People keep dying," the New York governor says. "You can't stop thinking about it." Slowly those tallies—at their worst, 799 dead in a day—have bent back toward zero as New York, ravaged like nowhere else in the U.S. by COVID-19, emerges from the darkest period of its awful spring. After months of lockdowns and overcrowded hospitals, "we are on the other side of the mountain," Cuomo tells People. "More people would have died, but for what we did. I get it. But it's still a hollow rationale. You make the best judgment you can at that time." The life-and-death decisions of a pandemic—ordering New Yorkers to stay home, closing one of the biggest economies in the world, mandating face masks—are Cuomo's alone to make, but he's grateful to have company as he works. In March his twins, Mariah and Cara, 25, and their sister Michaela, 22, moved in to the governor's mansion in Albany to quarantine together. "If there's a silver lining to any of this," he says, "that's one."

Otherwise it's been an agonizing three months, the three-term governor, 62, freely admits. "They put bodies in refrigerated trucks, for crying out loud." But it's a moment he feels he was made for. "Government is an art form," says the oldest son of the late Mario Cuomo, New York's former three-term governor and nationally prominent Democrat. "I've studied it all my life." For 111 straight days, in a series of press conferences that made him the country's most-watched politician not named Trump, Cuomo updated New Yorkers and millions of others on the pandemic. At the same time, he opened a window into life at the center of a plague. He was stern and determined; he was wry; he was worried. "Nobody knows when it's going to end," he says now. "Neither do I. I think people listened because they felt that I understood where they were." Cuomo's grown daughters sometimes joined him, and brother Chris, a CNN anchor who contracted the virus in late March, beamed in from his home studio. The governor shared family stories, gave advice on coping with quarantine and ribbed daughter Mariah's boyfriend Tellef. "It was more real than a reality TV show," Cuomo says. "I didn't know what tomorrow was going to bring."

What he did know was this: how to get things done—turning into a virtue the long-standing criticism that he is domineering, a control freak. ("We operate at two speeds here: Get along and kill," an aide once said.) "When was the last time a governor was relevant? It doesn't happen," Cuomo says. "This is a deadly serious situation, the type of situation where government is especially relevant." The daughters he shares with ex-wife Kerry Kennedy helped too: Cara, Mariah and Michaela all play a role in the state's response, juggling that with school and work. Cara was the last of her siblings to arrive in Albany and, while in isolation, "I had some of the best conversations with her that I have ever had," Cuomo said at a press conference in March. Cara worked on tracking down masks and gowns for hospital workers. Michaela worked with support groups. And, before his daily briefings recently ended amid New York's shrinking infection rate, Mariah (who led a mask-wearing PSA campaign) watched each one, texting feedback and suggesting

Brotherly Love in the Spotlight

The on-air banter between Cuomo and his younger brother, CNN anchor Chris Cuomo, features eye rolls and bickering over who's Mom's favorite. "Some people say I shouldn't come on this show because you harass me," the governor joked in May. ("Can't take it? Want a pat on the back?" Chris quipped back.) But when Chris, 49, was sick with COVID-19, it was "scary," Cuomo admits. "I couldn't see him, couldn't hug him."

follow-up tweets he might post. "Got it! Stay with me!" he wrote back to her recently. "Need u love u."

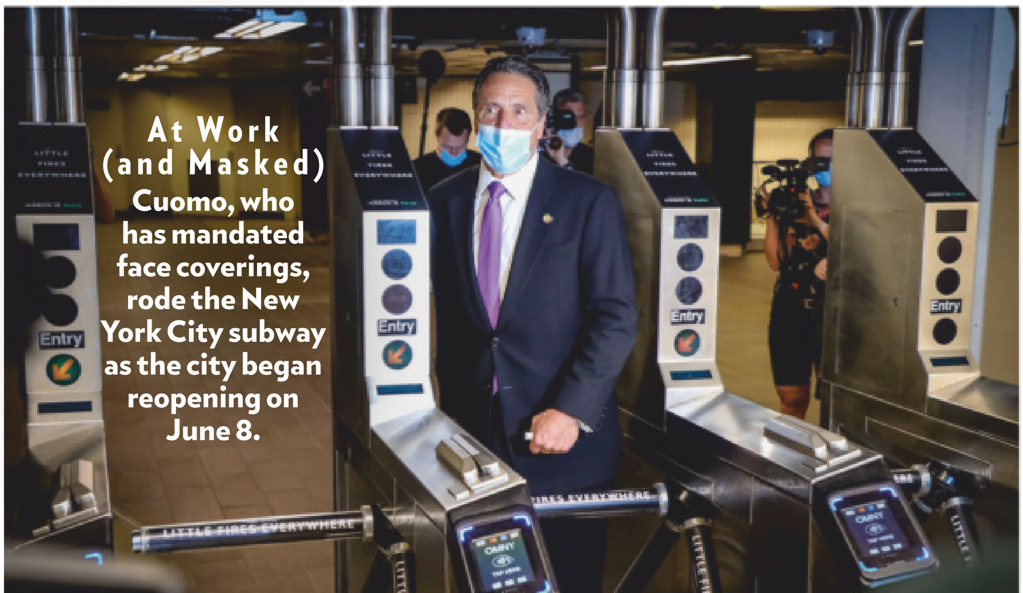
The caught-on-video death of George Floyd—with a Minneapolis police officer's knee on his neck—on May 25 presented Cuomo with overlapping crises as tens of thousands of New Yorkers surged to mass demonstrations against racial injustice. Cuomo tried to thread the needle between the public health risks of mass gatherings during a pandemic and the demonstrators' just cause, but he didn't always succeed. In mid-June, after he became the first governor since Floyd's killing to sign major police reform, Cuomo told demonstrators, "You don't need to protest—you won," then was dinged as dismissive. (A spokeswoman says that was out of context and that he "stands with the protesters.") Speaking with People, he channels their outrage at racially profiled police brutality: "How horrendous to watch that video [of Floyd's detention]. Look what one person did to another person. He killed him."

'This whole reopening is a new challenge, the next chapter'

—GOV. ANDREW CUOMO



At Work (and Masked)

Cuomo, who has mandated face coverings, rode the New York City subway as the city began reopening on June 8.

Now that New York is one of the few states to have successfully flattened—and (so far) kept flat—its COVID-19 infection and mortality rates, Cuomo's choices in the early days have been pulled apart by some. Did he act quickly enough to institute a lockdown? Was it a mistake to send COVID-19 patients to nursing homes? "There were no preventable deaths," he insists. "Everyone who passed away, we did everything we could. But they still died. It is a constant, depressing reality." (He hasn't had a full night's sleep—an "herbal concoction" from his daughters only gave him a stomachache—or any alcohol since the pandemic began. "At my age, even one glass of wine, you feel it the next day, and I didn't want to be diminished in any way," he says.)

With New York State now in various phases of reopening, Cuomo hopes to see his mom, Matilda, 88, for the first time in four months. Maybe he'll even go on a date soon. (He jokes: "Man does not live by government alone.") But where he sees possibility, he can't help but also see risk. "People coming out of their homes, more people on buses, more people on sidewalks—increase economic activity, but keep virus spread low. That's the next chapter," Cuomo says. "Nobody wants to go back across the mountains, I can tell you that." ●

They were the words spoken by George Floyd as police officer Derek Chauvin pushed his knee into Floyd's neck during an arrest on a Minneapolis street May 25. The same ones uttered by Eric Garner, as the 43-year-old father of six was choked by a New York City police officer during an arrest on a Staten Island street corner in 2014. Now "I can't breathe" has become a rallying cry for protesters around the world as citizens demand an end to police brutality—and justice for those whose lives have been taken. "The passion being evoked is an indication that we need to have a conversation about policing discrimination, excessive force," says Matthew Vance, attorney for the family of Vicente Villela, another man of color who uttered those same words at least eight times during a fatal struggle with police in an Albuquerque jail last year. Says Vance: "How do we start communicating with each other with compassion and understanding?"

Driving home from a poker match with friends in the early-morning hours of March 28, 2019, Javier Ambler II, 40, allegedly failed to dim the headlights of his Honda Pilot SUV to oncoming traffic. A police report states Williamson County, Texas, sheriff's deputies attempted to pull him over; a 22-minute chase ensued, ending with Ambler crashing north of downtown Austin. "All they told us is that he died in police custody," says his younger sister Kimberly Ambler-Jones, 38. "Every time we asked a question in more detail… everything was hidden." But this June, Williamson County authorities released police body cam footage of Ambler's arrest that revealed his final moments. After the crash, Deputy J.J. Johnson and Deputy Zach Camden can be seen tasing Ambler, who told the officers he had congestive heart failure and called out "I am not resisting," "Please save me," "I can't breathe." He was unresponsive as police handcuffed him. It was also revealed that a television crew from A&E's docuseries Live PD had been with the officers and filmed the arrest (the series has since been canceled), and now district attorneys in Williamson and Travis counties are investigating whether authorities tampered with evidence. "They chose to cause harm instead of trying to help him," his sister says. "I don't know how you would not hold them accountable."

"I miss his smile," says sister Kimberly Ambler-Jones (with Javier).

Choked to Death by Police

A mechanic and father of four, Antonio Valenzuela was in the back seat of a friend’s truck when police investigating an alleged neighborhood burglary pulled them over. Officers said they had run the truck’s license plate and found no insurance listed and that Valenzuela was not wearing a seat belt. When officers discovered Valenzuela also had an open warrant for a parole violation, he tried to flee and officers tased him twice. Once Valenzuela was apprehended, Las Cruces police officer Christopher Smelser “utilized a vascular neck restraint technique which resulted in the death of Mr. Valenzuela,” District Attorney Mark D’Antonio said in a statement. In a chilling body cam video of the incident, the officer is heard saying: “I’m going to f---ing choke you out, bro.… Give up, bro.”

Smelser has been put on leave and is charged with involuntary manslaughter. He has not entered a plea and is free “on his own recognizance.” His defense attorneys say he was trained by the police academy and his department to use the choke hold that killed Valenzuela—a move now banned by the Las Cruces Police Department. But Valenzuela’s family wants second-degree murder charges brought. “Antonio was murdered,” says family attorney Sam Bregman. “And it’s unacceptable.”

Arrested on burglary charges, 37-year-old Vicente Villela was handcuffed and shackled at the Bernalillo County Detention Center in Albuquerque when he “became agitated and did not want to be moved,” according to court documents. What transpired next—documented on video cameras in the jail—led to the death of the father of two. Multiple officers pushed their knees into Villela’s back and held him, facedown, on a mattress. At least eight times, he told officers he couldn’t breathe, crying, “I can’t breathe, sir, please, I can’t breathe.” Though Bernalillo County communication director Tia Bland admitted, “Everyone in the county who has seen the video certainly understands this is a serious situation,” no officers were fired; two were reassigned. “What they did to my brother destroyed our family,” says Sandra Villela. “People don’t deserve to die that way.”

Just before dawn police officers Benjamin Vazquez and Patrick Campbell saw Byron Lee Williams, 50, riding a bicycle without a safety light and tried to pull him over. But Williams ditched the bike, fleeing on foot. When the officers finally captured him, their body cameras showed Williams handcuffed on the ground with officers kneeling on his back as he says 17 times "I can't breathe." Ordered to stand, Williams goes limp, and the cameras go blank for 15 minutes; Williams was pronounced dead less than an hour later. Williams, who had a criminal history that included drug trafficking, sexual assault and other crimes, was trying to turn his life around, says his stepson Jeffery Thompkins, 32. "He was trying to live his life right," Thompkins says. "People tried to drive the narrative that he was a criminal, he deserved to die. And it's hurtful. They treated him like garbage."

What Will Change?

As millions marched, demanding change after George Floyd's death, 16 state legislatures have "introduced, amended or passed 159 bills and resolutions related to policing," according to the nonprofit news organization the Marshall Project, with several banning the use of choke holds by officers. "I'd like to see choke holds made illegal," says Dr. Lorenzo Boyd, director of the University of New Haven's Center for Advanced Policing. "You're planning to stop blood flow to the brain. You're trying to be judge, jury and executioner."

Dennis Quaid & Laura Savoie's Wedding Joy

Like many couples, Dennis Quaid and Laura Savoie were excited to start putting together plans for their wedding after getting engaged last October. They set the date for April 4 in Hawaii, with another celebration later in Nashville for more family and friends. But then the COVID-19 pandemic struck. After most of the country went on lockdown, the two waited "to decide what would be the safest thing to do for everybody," Quaid says. Their ultimate decision? A romantic elopement to Santa Barbara. "And we're really glad we did," adds the actor, "because it was about us. It was beautiful."

On June 2, with only their pastor as a witness, Quaid, 66, and Savoie, 27, said their vows to one another at an oceanside resort. "Just looking into her eyes, she was the most stunning bride," says the actor, who opted for a Hugo Boss suit. Savoie, a doctoral student, wore a Chosen by One Day gown and carried a bouquet of calla lilies and roses from S.R. Hogue & Co. Savoie was moved by their officiant's message "of what it really means to bring your lives together," she says. "To put another person before yourself."

After meeting at a business event, Quaid and Savoie began dating in May 2019 before he surprised her with a proposal in Hawaii that October. “But really it was love at first sight,” says the actor, who currently hosts the podcast The Dennissance through Audio Up, a company that he cofounded. Originally from St. Louis, Savoie attended Pepperdine University, where she was class valedictorian, and went on to get a master’s degree in accountancy at the University of Notre Dame. “I just love who she is as a person,” says Quaid. “Her character, her intelligence, of course her beauty. And her point of view of the world.” Savoie insists she has “never met someone who is so in love with life. It’s like nothing can bring him down,” she explains. “Just getting to do life with someone who lives that way is inspiring for me. It changes my perspective and it brings so much joy to every day.”

As for the couple’s age difference, “it really just doesn’t come up,” adds Quaid, who has been married three times before (to P.J. Soles, Meg Ryan and Kimberly Buffington). “There’s just something timeless about us. We’re partners in our relationship and in life. It’s love. And love just has a way of surprising you.” Savoie finds strength in her husband’s maturity, “like the wisdom that Dennis has,” she says. “We both had to go through things to be who we are now, and who we are now was ready for each other.” The couple’s faith plays a large role in their life together as well. “We’re both Christians, and right from the start God has always had a hand in the relationship,” Quaid adds. “I think that’s where the real strength comes from.”

Back at home and settling into their routine as husband and wife, the couple hope to take a honeymoon in the next month or so and still plan to host a reception for family and friends “when the time is right,” says Quaid, a father of three. For now the actor most looks forward to “just sharing our lives together,” he adds. “She’s the greatest person I ever met. I love waking up and spending every day with her.”

Forever Love
"Even though we were an hour late to our wedding, the day was perfect," says Maday. "I know my future with Raven will hold. I feel so grateful to be doing life with my love!"

Raven-Symoné & Miranda Maday Say 'I Do'

In front of just six guests in L.A., Raven-Symoné and girlfriend Miranda Maday sealed their love on June 16. "Despite being someone who has kept my personal life private, I decided to share this moment because it's one of the biggest and happiest of my life," the former Cosby Show actress, 34, tells People of marrying her wife, 32, a business owner. "Miranda makes me feel confident and empowered in an entirely new way!" The event was officiated by their pal Erica Summers and included a catered meal created by famed choreographer and Grey's Anatomy star Debbie Allen, a longtime friend of Raven-Symoné's. The actress—who stars on Disney Channel's Raven's Home and has a new album, The Reintroduction, dropping June 26—says she and her wife had fun with their "hype beast" outfits and their first dance ("99 Problems" by Jay-Z). "It was a true reflection of our love and partnership," she says. "It couldn't have been better…well, the post-corona[virus] party might be!" ●

When Bill Pullman was offered his most famous role, playing the pilot turned President in 1996's sci-fi hit film Independence Day, he assumed the movie was going to be a comedy. "It never occurred to me I could play a President of the United States," says the actor, who's more of an easygoing guy next door than a Commander-in-Chief. "It wasn't natural for me to be that kind of person." The upstate New York native, 66, was already in his 30s when he first found fame in the '80s with Ruthless People and Spaceballs. Before that, he spent 10 years as a theater teacher in New York and Montana, where he still owns a cattle ranch and lives part-time. Now, more than 60 films later, he's relishing his newest role, as a dogged detective in USA's series The Sinner, which just got picked up for a fourth season. "I'm about as happy doing it as I have ever been doing anything," he says of the psychological thriller. He also stars as a deejay in the musical film The High Note with Tracee Ellis Ross and Dakota Johnson, now on demand. "All three of my children

When the COVID-19 crisis hit the nation, these seven business leaders stepped up to give back to their employees—and their communities By JOHNNY DODD

Creating His Own 'Stimulus Package' for Employees

It was in early March that Texas Roadhouse restaurant founder Kent Taylor first grasped the severity of the health crisis about to hit the nation—and realized he had to do something. Within days, the 64-year-old CEO (inset) went to work buying latex gloves, masks and eyewear to protect the workers in his nearly 600 restaurants (like those in McKinney, Texas, above). Although few other businesses were doing that at the time, he recalls, "I didn't care what people thought." Then, as quarantine restrictions reduced customer traffic to his restaurants, he went to work, as he puts it, "creating our own stimulus package." Taylor donated his yearly salary and bonus (totaling more than $800,000) and pitched in another $5 million to an emergency fund he'd created for employees 18 years ago, to help with rent and mortgage payments, utility bills, even funeral expenses. So far, the company has had no layoffs or pay cuts. "This isn't about making money right now," says Taylor. "It's about taking care of our people."

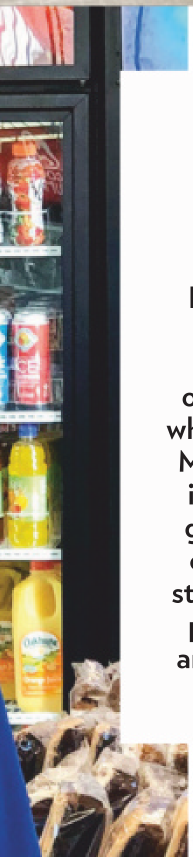
Delivering Food and Wi-Fi to Students in Need

Like plenty of parents in Dayton, real estate executive Larry Connor (inset) was worried about what would happen when schools in the city closed because of the coronavirus. How, he wondered, would students from low-income families who depended on schools for breakfasts and lunches, as well as Internet access, weather the crisis? "So I got in my pickup truck and loaded the back bed with food and made deliveries to people's homes," says the 70-year-old CEO of the Connor Group, who had help from volunteers (pictured) and donated more than $1 million to the effort. Connor also partnered with Sprint to fund Wi-Fi hot spots throughout the city "to help students complete their homework and prepare for college." Says Dr. Elizabeth Lolli, Dayton Public Schools superintendent: "Access to the Internet is a game-changer for our students." Connor has been equally giving to his staff. In April he earned $1.6 million from a series of stock market trades and donated the proceeds to his employees. "When you're successful," he says, "you have an opportunity and an obligation to give back."



Giving Gift Cards to First Responders

In the weeks after the coronavirus began upending life across the nation, Nino Naous watched as exhausted police and ambulance drivers wandered into his Mobil on the Way station for coffee, gas or a snack. And that's when the 50-year-old immigrant, who owns the Lewiston, Maine, business with his wife, Nadine (pictured), had an idea: "I felt like we should do something to cheer those guys up, given how stressful their jobs are." In April the couple handed out hundreds of cash gift cards to their store, worth $6,000, to local police, hospital workers and paramedics. "My wife and I were both born in Lebanon and appreciate everything this country has given us," he says. "So we wanted to give back."

They Pulled Cash from the Walls

Business has always been good at Hott Leggz, a popular restaurant and sports bar in Fort Lauderdale known for its crab legs, burgers and wings. But when co-owners Ky Novak, 52, and Juliana Sodre, 41, were forced to temporarily shut down their nine-year-old business on St. Patrick's Day because of the pandemic, Sodre says, they were deeply "concerned about how our employees were going to survive." They didn't have the cash to continue paying their 23 workers but quickly realized that their walls were covered with dollar bills left behind by customers—$9,648 worth of them, to be exact. "It was quite a task, but we used needle-nose pliers to take them down," says Novak, whose employees (below) pitched in on the three-week project that, when divided equally paired with some donations, netted each one $498. "The actual value of the money wasn't life-changing, but knowing that they work for someone who cares is."

Headphones, Homework and the Power of Quiet for Students

Win Cramer was determined to help San Diego students after the pandemic forced school administrators to cancel on-site classes, but he didn't know exactly how. Enter his 14-year-old daughter Avery, who was engrossed in homework on her laptop one afternoon in early April, thanks to a pair of headphones that insulated the eighth grader from the noise around her. "I immediately realized that we had a way to help and started making calls to the school district," says Cramer, CEO of the wireless headphone company JLab Audio. Within weeks the executive, 43, had donated 3,000 pairs of their neon-bright headphones to local students like Roman, Christian and Sophia Ortiz (pictured). The technology was greatly appreciated by officials. "For families who don't have a dedicated learning space in the home," says San Diego County school superintendent Dr. Paul Gothold, "headphones reduce distractions and help students better focus." Adds Cramer: "Everyone deserves a personal space to learn."

Disinfecting the Front Lines

Peter Barbera is used to sanitizing buildings after they've been inundated by fires, floods and mold infestation. So when the pandemic hit, the 42-year-old SERVPRO franchise owner in Bordentown, N.J., decided to donate his company's services to disinfect the vehicles and offices of local firefighters and police. "First responders work hard day in and day out to keep us safe," says Barbera, who began dispatching his Tyvek-clad employees to firehouses (like this crew in Hamilton Square, N.J.) and police stations with their sterilizing fogging machines in April. "This was just a small way for us to give back." Adds a grateful Brian Pesce, Bordentown's police chief: "They've really done right by those of us who deal with infected people on a daily basis and are just trying to get home safe to their families."

Inspiration from Grandpa

Recently Tim Boyle, CEO of Columbia Sportswear, has been thinking a lot about his grandfather Paul Lamfrom, who left Nazi Germany in 1937 with $20, abandoning his massive shirt factory. "He basically fled for his life," says Boyle (with staff at the Employee Store in Portland, Ore.). In March, Boyle, 70, decided to slash his $3.3 million salary to $10,000 to help ensure that his nearly 9,000 employees would receive their regular pay and benefits. (At least 10 of the Oregon-based outdoor sportswear retailer's top executives took voluntary 15 percent pay cuts.) "I realize that it's not the same now, but if my grandfather could do what he did at the age of 55, we can get through this," says Boyle. "We've been through so many challenging times before."

Turning Point
After the initial shock, Knowles (with Beyoncé in 2007) saw his breast cancer as a way to raise awareness in men. "It makes me feel good that I'm giving back," he says.

AFTER UNDERGOING A MASTECTOMY, THE MUSIC PRODUCER WANTS TO EDUCATE OTHER MEN By JULIE MAZZIOTTA

The first time Mathew Knowles spotted a pinprick-size red dot on his shirt, in July 2019, he didn't think much of it. He found another spot on his shirt at the end of the next day, but again, the music producer and father to superstars Beyoncé and Solange let it go. When it happened a third time, though, Knowles, 68, brought it up to his wife of seven years, Gena Avery, who said she had noticed similar spots on their bedsheets. "I said, 'Okay, I need to go to the doctor,'" recalls Knowles, who had learned to be mindful of his health after years of selling medical devices, including mammography equipment. Though he hadn't felt like anything was wrong, he knew that nipple discharge is one of the signs of breast cancer for men. After a mammogram and a biopsy, his suspicions were confirmed: He had breast cancer. "I was in disbelief," he says.

Breast cancer in men is rare—only about 1 percent of the more than 270,000 breast cancer cases in the U.S. each year occur in men—but around 500 of the 2,670 men diagnosed will die. Knowles says he was lucky: His cancer was stage 1A, meaning it was small and had not spread to the lymph nodes. "I'm very, very grateful," he says. "I'm fortunate that I didn't have to do any chemo."

But it wasn't easy telling Avery, 55, who had just lost her sister to breast cancer. "For her to hear now her husband has breast cancer," he says, "it was very difficult." Also difficult: He would need a mastectomy in one breast. He held off on telling his daughters about his cancer until after the surgery. "I wanted to reassure them that it wasn't a life-or-death situation," he says. The procedure went well—he was at work a week later—and now he's in remission.

But there was one more surprise. Tests revealed that he has the BRCA2 gene mutation, which raises

Male Breast Cancer: What to Know

Breast cancer cases in men make up just 1 percent of all diagnoses each year, but the disease is similar to what women experience, says Dr. Sharon Giordano, a chair in cancer research at the University of Texas MD Anderson Cancer Center. "Men have some breast tissue behind the nipple which can become cancerous, just as in women," she says. The treatment is typically a mastectomy, as Knowles had, and patients may need radiation or chemotherapy if the cancer is in later stages. What's worrisome, though, is that men die of breast cancer at a higher rate—19 percent higher—than women. "Unfortunately men tend to be diagnosed with more advanced disease than women and therefore have lower survival rates," Giordano says. "That may be due to lack of awareness that breast cancer can happen in men." She advises men to see a doctor immediately if they develop a lump under their nipples or have nipple discharge.

his risk for breast, melanoma, prostate and pancreatic cancers. "All those years I've been in diagnostic imaging, I had never heard the word BRCA before," he says. "If I'd known, I would have had a double mastectomy." Knowles "immediately" went to get MRIs of his prostate, pancreas and liver and underwent a skin cancer screening, which he repeats every six months. And he started working with Invitae, a genetic testing company, because he wants everyone with a family history to get tested—he has gotten Beyoncé and Solange to do it—and stay on top of their health. "If you're ahead of the curve, then your outcome will be, most of the time, great," he says. "I'm a living example." He knows it isn't easy for men to speak up if they are concerned. "I didn't feel good opening that door that said Women's Breast Center or having the person ask me, 'How can I help you?' thinking I'm waiting on my wife," he says, but his peers need to "man up" about breast cancer, or "chest cancer," as he prefers to call it: "This can't just be about females."

Avery says that this experience has changed her husband "for the better." He cut out alcohol, changed his diet and now regularly exercises. "He's become an advocate for male health and wellness, especially among our Black men," she says. In fact, African-American men have breast cancer rates 52 percent higher than white men. "I want to save lives," Knowles says, "especially in the Black community." ●

PLANTING WITH PURPOSE

HOW THE L.A. GARDENER LAUNCHED A GLOBAL FOOD MOVEMENT FROM HIS FRONT YARD

By MACKENZIE SCHMIDT

Ron Finley is known to many in his South Los Angeles community as "the gangster gardener," but the nickname has nothing to do with gangs or violence. "Growing up we'd say, 'Oh, that's gangster,' and that meant that it was 'fly as hell,'" he says. In his view, gardening fits that description perfectly. "I want young people to see that gardening is sexy, and even more appealing than the negative stuff around us."

But in the neighborhood once known as South Central, gardening and accessing fresh produce was—and still is—a struggle. He describes the urban area as a "food desert," where cheap convenience and

"This is not just about food, this is about freedom," says Finley, who fought the city of Los Angeles for the right to plant streetside edible gardens.

SEEDS OF CHANGE
The 2010 parkway planting (above) inspired Finley's activism. Companies "aren't bringing healthy food into these communities, and it's by design. I'm redesigning it," he says. Right: A dresser drawer gets a new life as an herb garden in one of his MasterClass lessons.

fast food is plentiful but organic, healthy options are difficult to find. "I want to build a food forest," says Finley, who is also an activist, artist and fashion designer.

In 2010 he set out to create free edible gardens from something the area had in abundance: empty lots and scruffy medians. "I was looking at the parkway, where people would dump their dressers and their toilets, and I wanted to see something beautiful instead," he says. "Health is not just what you eat. It's what you see, what you smell, what you feel."

Armed with a few tools, packets of seeds and skills he learned as a kid gardening with his mother, Finley dug up a 150-by-10-ft. stretch by the road and planted it with lettuce, peppers, tomatoes and more. As he worked on the small plot and things began to grow, it attracted the attention of his neighbors, whom he allowed to pick and eat from the garden. "I was like, 'Okay, other people need this.' That was the start," he says. He began adding other gardens in any usable space he could find, including the empty Olympic-size pool behind his home, a former swimming school.

Finley has always been something of an entrepreneur. "I used to mow lawns and pull weeds as a kid for $2. At 15, I learned to be a master tailor," he says. In junior high, when he wasn’t allowed to take home ec, he convinced his school to add a boys’ cooking class so he could learn to bake. Gardening was a natural extension of that spirit.

He’s also adamant about teaching young people to garden. “If kids grow kale, they’ll eat it, because now they have skin in the game,” says Finley, who has three adult sons. As his mission started taking off, his original plot on the parkway also caught the attention of city officials, who told him he lacked a necessary permit and had to remove the plantings. When he refused, the citation turned into a warrant for his arrest. “I said, ‘Do what you’re going to do, because I’m not taking this garden out,’ ” he recalls. Following a yearslong fight, he eventually got the law changed in 2015, allowing Los Angeles residents to plant gardens on city-owned medians. During that battle and after, he kept planting and helping to educate others. He met experts to learn about issues of food access, he gave a TED talk about “guerrilla gardening” that went viral in 2013 and this year he shared his compendium of knowledge as part of MasterClass, the digital platform that provides video lessons taught by superstars in fields from filmmaking to political strategy. Now, with his organization the Ron Finley Project, he travels the world leading workshops and seminars.

While the urban-gardening movement has grown—“I get messages from people in the U.K., Brazil, India,” he says—it has felt especially vital to him in the last few months, when the pandemic magnified issues of food insecurity and protests called for racial equality. Finley says gardening is more important than ever. “Gardens equal freedom to me,” he explains. “This is not a hobby, this is a life skill. Everybody should be able to have a healthy, nutritious meal, and this is where it starts.” He often uses the catchphrase, “Growing your own food is like printing your own money.”

As social justice demonstrations continue, Finley admits he doesn’t deal in “hope.” But he is optimistic about the future. “We have an opportunity now to change things. That’s what I love,” he says. “Everything starts small.” It just takes someone to plant the seed. ●

How to Start a Garden

1/Know Your Dirt “If you don’t know where your soil’s been,” Finley says, it might be contaminated. Buy some and plant in containers instead.

2/Start a Compost Pile “Collect leaves, organic matter and all your kitchen scraps.” They break down into “luscious soil” and help grow healthier plants.

3/Don’t Expect Perfection “There are no mistakes, only lessons,” says Finley. “Gardening should be an experiment where you learn something.”

4/Plant What Makes You Happy “My go-to is sunflowers. It’s impossible to look at a sunflower and not smile, especially when it’s 14 ft.-high.”

WITH WIMBLEDON OFF THE SCHEDULE, THE TENNIS ICON IS FINDING NEW WAYS TO SERVE

VENUS WILLIAMS

Queen of the Court

This month Venus Williams finds herself on unfamiliar ground—that is, not on the well-manicured grass of the All England Club outside of London, competing in what would have been her 23rd career Wimbledon. Canceled for the first time since World War II because of the coronavirus pandemic, the storied tournament is where Williams, 40, became bona fide tennis royalty. "When the season starts, I will be ready," Williams wrote to her fans on Twitter in late March. "Can't wait. Can you?"

Despite a shifting tournament calendar, Williams maintains a busy schedule. She's training for a spectator-less U.S. Open in late August, and her lifestyle brand EleVen by Venus Williams recently introduced an eco-conscious skin-care line in partnership with cosmetics brand Credo. Inspired by current events, she's also reaffirming a commitment to improve the lives of young Black people. "I'm passionate about creating opportunities for Black youth at a grassroots level, especially with tennis and education," says Williams, who has been matching fan donations to the Equal Justice Initiative. "In turn, that gives them the opportunity to be excellent."

Williams—who learned the game from her father, Richard, on public courts near her childhood home in Compton, Calif.—turned pro in 1994 at only 14. She made her Wimbledon debut in 1997, and in 2000 she won her first singles crown, defeating fellow American Lindsay Davenport. Four singles titles, six doubles championships with her sister Serena and an Olympic gold medal later, Williams says, "It's challenging to pick a favorite Wimbledon memory. The 2012 Olympics stand out as of one of the most interesting experiences of my career, but all those doubles wins are so special to Serena and me." The victory that she calls her proudest professional accomplishment, however, did not take place on a court. In the mid-2000s she was instrumental in convincing the governing bodies of Wimbledon and the French Open to award men and women equal prize money. "That," she says, "was long overdue." —DAVID WALTERS

Support Structure

"My greatest inspiration is my mom [Oracene Price]. Throughout my career, she has challenged me to pursue my creative side. That led me to realize my love of fashion and design, and to launch my activewear line EleVen and my design company V Starr. She pushes me to be my best self. That's the meaning of EleVen—always working to be an 11 out of 10."

Grilled Sweet-&-Sour Shrimp Kebabs

'This recipe is so simple that you don't need any special tricks to make it great,' the author of the Flavors of the Southeast Asian Grill cookbook says about her spin on the popular Thai street-food snack

4	cups ice water
1½	tsp. baking soda
1½	tsp. kosher salt, divided
1⅔	lb. large peeled, deveined raw shrimp, tail-on
2	Tbsp. tap water
1	tsp. cornstarch
4	large garlic cloves, minced
¼	cup canned tomato puree
2½	Tbsp. Sriracha chile sauce
2½	Tbsp. packed light brown sugar
1	Tbsp. white or apple cider vinegar

Canola oil, for greasing
Fresh cilantro leaves, for garnish

1. Soak 12 (12-inch) bamboo skewers in water for 1½ hours, or set aside metal skewers.
2. Meanwhile, stir together ice water, baking soda and 1 teaspoon of the salt in a large bowl until baking soda and salt dissolve. Add shrimp, weighing them down with a bowl to keep submerged. Let stand 30 minutes.
3. Preheat grill to high (450° to 500°). Whisk together tap water and cornstarch in a small bowl until cornstarch dissolves. Set aside.
4. Stir together garlic, tomato puree, Sriracha, sugar, vinegar and remaining ½ teaspoon salt in a medium saucepan; bring to a gentle boil over medium-high heat, stirring to dissolve sugar. Reduce heat to low, and simmer 1 minute. Add cornstarch slurry, and cook, stirring constantly, 1 minute. Remove from heat, and let sauce cool to room temperature, about 15 minutes.
5. Drain shrimp, rinse under cold running water, and blot dry with paper towels. Thread 5 to 6 shrimp onto each skewer; brush evenly with half of the Sriracha sauce.
6. Coat top grill grate with oil; place kebabs on oiled grates. Grill, covered, until grill marks have formed and shrimp are opaque in center, about 3 minutes per side.
7. Transfer shrimp to a platter, and sprinkle with cilantro. Serve immediately with remaining Sriracha sauce on the side.
Serves: 6 Active time: 40 minutes
Total time: 1 hour, 30 minutes

quick tip!

"Shrimp can get soft and mealy in the fridge," says Punyaratabandhu. "Soaking them in ice-cold water, baking soda and salt returns them to a snappy, crisp texture."

Grilled Corn with Dill Butter & Feta

'The tangy, briny feta, fresh dill and smoky char from the grill take the sweet corn to the next level,' says the author of the new Serial Griller cookbook

- 6 Tbsp. unsalted butter, softened
- 2 Tbsp. chopped fresh dill, plus more for garnish
- 1 tsp. grated lemon zest plus ½ Tbsp. fresh juice (from 1 lemon)
- ¾ tsp. kosher salt
- ¾ tsp. freshly ground black pepper
- 6 ears fresh corn
- 1 oz. feta cheese, crumbled (about ¼ cup)

1. Open bottom vent of a charcoal grill completely. Light a charcoal chimney starter filled with charcoal briquettes. When briquettes are covered with gray ash, pour them onto bottom grate of grill. Adjust vents as needed to maintain an internal temperature of 450° to 500°. Coat top grate with oil; place on grill. (If using a gas grill, preheat to high, or 450° to 500°.)

2. Stir together softened butter, dill, lemon zest and juice, salt and pepper in a small bowl until well combined.

3. Place corn on hot, oiled grates. Grill uncovered, turning often, until charred on all sides, about 8 minutes. Transfer to a serving platter. Brush each ear of corn with 1 tablespoon of the dill butter, and sprinkle with feta. Garnish with additional dill; serve immediately.

Serves: 6 Active time: 20 minutes
Total time: 20 minutes

quick tip!

Make the dill butter ahead, and store it in the refrigerator, covered, for up to 5 days. Before using, let the butter soften at room temperature for about 10 minutes.

How to Choose the Best Ears of Corn

Look at the Husks

The husks on fresh corn are bright green, wrapped tightly around the cob, and slightly damp. Avoid husks that are dried out or turning yellow—it means the corn is old.

Give It a Squeeze

Juicy, ripe corn feels plump and firm to the touch. Gently squeeze the ear of corn: If you feel softness or missing kernels, choose a different one.

Inspect the Tassle

The stringy fluff at the top of the corn (known as the corn silk) is a good indication of freshness. It should be a light brown or golden color and be sticky to touch.

Last moment of gratitude

A couple months ago everyone started coming outside at 8 p.m. to thank the people on the front lines. We never stopped doing it. My boys whoop and clap out the window every night. I think it should become a permanent worldwide ritual.

Last time I was starstruck

I got to get in Oscar the Grouch's trash can on Sesame Street. It was not only a career highlight, it was a life highlight.

Last time I was in awe

Watching the recent SpaceX launch. I know how much work it takes to do something easy, like make a movie. I cannot fathom what it took to pull that off. I felt proud just to be part of the human race. We mess up so much, it felt good to see that we can still do incredible things.

Last time I was at a loss for words

Some of the tragic events in our country these last few weeks have left me feeling so upset I've been at a loss for words. But probably just as well for me not to speak and focus on listening.

Last time I danced

Every day with my kids. And what's fantastic is my boys can't tell how mediocre a dancer I really am. Soon enough they'll learn the truth, but for now it's pure glory.
